Dept. of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, Office of Employment and Unemployment Statistics, 2004 OCLC Number: (OCoLC)218515413 Subject: Labor market -- United States. Excerpt: . . . pace of job destruction among historically declining industries and a relatively higher pace of job creation among historically expanding industries during this period. To explore this hypothesis, I separate 3-digit NAICS industries based on their employment growth between December 1993 and December 2000. I define Expanding industries as those with growth at least one standard deviation greater than the private sector rate over this period ( about 18 percent ), and Declining industries as those with growth less than one standard deviation below the private sector rate. By this definition, there are 11 expanding 3-digit industries, which notably include, internet publishing and services, telecommunications, and professional and administrative services. There are also 16 declining industries, which primarily include manufacturing plants in the food, textile, apparel, paper, printing, chemicals, and primary 8 I list all industries in Table A. 2 of the appendix. Table 2 shows the metal industries. employment trends of...
