Disease Additional light is shed on the much mooted question as to the efficiency of medical prophylaxis in the control of venereal disease by the compilations published in Social Hygiene by Colonel P. M. Washburn, M. C. , U. S. A. , at one time in charge of the venereal disease control measures in the United States Army. Common reference to the practically certain prevention of venereal infection by the practice of immediate self-disinfection has brought with it the suggestion that similar plans be carried on among the civilian population. The returns from 13, 648 questionnaires of members of the American Expeditionary Forces indicated that whereas there was one venereal infection out of every thirty unprotected contacts, there was one infection for ninety exposures where medical prophylaxis was employed, a reduction of about one-third in the incidence of infection in favor of prophylaxis.
