It is assumed that the following questions and suggestive comments are supplementary to the study of the notes and introduction to the R. L. S. edition of Burke s Speech on Conciliation with America. A careful study of this editorial equipment and of the speech itself may, in some cases, precede the study of the following questions and comments. Many teachers, however, will wish to use them together. The numbers following refer to paragraphs. 1. Why did Burke welcome the return of the grand 1 The references which follow are to No. 100 of the E. L. S., published by Houghton Mifflin Company. Price, paper, ICo.; cloth, 28c. penal bill? What did Burke mean when he said that they were not embarrassed by the mixture of coercion and restraint? How could they have made themselves embarrassed? 2. Why was the subject an awful one? Would it have appeared so to a mere demagogue? Do you think the government of the Philippines appears an awful one to the average congressman? Should it? Comment on the sentence, Something of this sort, etc. Is the parallel structure effective? Are the figures illuminating? 3. What, in general, was the conception he had formed of American rights? 4. Parliament s view is here contrasted with the view of a single individual. Which has the advantage? Why? What has Parliament done? Why has it done this? What has been the...
